SERVICE STATION:

A column acknowledging the volunteer work of students and faculty at Marquette High.

by Joseph Nicholson

As the year draws to a close and the final Flambeau pages roll off the printing press until next fall, we are able to look back upon a truly successful year. Aided, of course, by exceptional events such as numerous state championships, interesting and cooperative individual newsmakers, and the ever-amusing institution of conclave, the Flambeau has enjoyed a wealth of topics upon which to base articles. In the same way, Service Station can also boast of never running low on sufficient material.

Hats off to MUHS

This fact stands as a tribute to the students and faculty of Marquette High. Just as the efforts of scores of students provided the Flambeau with plenty of newsworthy subjects, so too was it the work of students and faculty alike that enabled a column such as this to remain in existence through two semesters and seven issues of the Flambeau. That means a lot of service, which affected a lot of people. Marquette High can be proud of this achievement.

But it need not end here, naturally. There are many areas for continuous volunteering throughout the summer. On Monday, April 13th, each of the four classes attended an assembly designed to inform students of various opportunities open to them this summer. The possibilities were vast and anyone who glanced at the list almost certainly found that many of the activities even sounded fun.

Limitless Opportunities

For those with very little time to spend on volunteering this summer, it was made clear that some of the activities are of the sort where the volunteer is only needed for a single project, such as taking a child to Summerfest or hosting a jazz concert. Other volunteer roles involve more time, a few of which could possibly develop into a summer-long project requiring, for example, a few hours every week to answer a telephone or read a book to someone. Whatever the limitations on time one may have, it is clear that there is some activity which can be done.

271-7337

So the key seems to lie, as always, with the desire to take the first step by calling the Greater Milwaukee Voluntary Action Center and discussing the opportunities available. By simply letting the VAC know what interests you, they will be able to provide a broad range of possibilities. The VAC can be called during office hours any weekday at 271-7337. Other volunteer opportunities are available through the Red Cross at 342-8680. Both organizations are very helpful in helping you find something you will enjoy. Also, volunteering with a friend is not uncommon. This eliminates that initial fear which sometimes comes with taking on a new activity. Whatever you decide upon, be it a short term project or long, alone or with friends, I'm sure that you will experience a much more rewarding summer having volunteered some of your time to helping someone else.
